

Truck drivers rely heavily on mobile apps to make their jobs easier and more efficient. One popular app is Trucker Path, which helps drivers find truck stops, parking, weigh stations, and fuel prices. It also provides real-time updates from other drivers in the area. The app is free to download, with optional premium features, and runs on both iOS and Android phones.

Another useful app is Samsara Driver, which is mainly used for electronic logging and tracking hours of service. It helps drivers stay compliant with regulations because they are only allowed so many hours in a day while also allowing companies to track routes, performance and unsafe driving. Samsara is part of a paid subscription service used by companies, and it works on smartphones and tablets of both operating systems.

A third app is DAT Load Board, which allows drivers to find available loads and bid on jobs. This is especially useful for independent truckers who own their own truck and do not work for somebody else's company looking to maximize income. The app requires a paid subscription and it is also available on both Android and iOS devices.
